

What happens at a play party?

Play parties are just as social as munches, you'll find a lot of time is spent in conversation and socialization.

Dress code for a play party includes: fetish wear, nothing at all, your favorite jeans and T-shirt, or anything in-between. There is no specific dress code for play parties we just ask that attendees wait to put on fetish wear until inside so as to avoid drawing unwanted attention to the group/event. There is no sex allowed at play parties, no penetration with toys, fingers, or other body parts, oral sex is also prohibited.

This is a chance for you to play or even watch others play. It is also an opportunity to learn; at many play parties, there is either a demonstration or a discussion of a topic relevant to BDSM relationships and specific types of play.

There is no expectation that you have to play, you can choose to spend the night socializing and watching others play if you so desire. If you see a toy or style of play that catches your interest, please respect the participants' space and wait until they're out of scene and aftercare to ask. Most people are more than happy to show off their toys and talk about their favorite types of play. Some will be more than happy to show you how to do a specific activity or give you pointers on how to make (or where to buy) a specific toy.

There are designated dungeon monitors who will be responsible throughout the night to make sure all play is consensual and safe. All edge play must clear through a DM prior to beginning the scene. If you see something that concerns you, or appears unsafe, tell a DM and let them handle it, do not attempt to interfere in a scene yourself. Remember, things are not always, as they appear and a particular kink is not wrong just because it upsets you. If you find a scene that upsets you, remove yourself from the area.

A Basic Pre-Scene Interview is included on the following page. Feel free to detach the form and use it as a part of your negotiations with a potential play partner.
